FACULTY OF MEDICINE

MAHSA
UNIVERSITY

Public health is the science and art of preventing disease, prolonging life, and promoting health through the organised efforts and informed choices of society, organisations, public and private communities, and individuals!

- CEA Winslow

Eminent Professor & Founder of Department of Public Health in Yale University, USA.

Public health is an interdisciplinary field that seeks to prevent injury, illness and premature death, promote health and wellness, and prolong life. Candidates will understand and apply public health theory and research methods to improve the overall health of the community and population. At MAHSA, our mission is to prepare candidates to become dedicated, competent, and ethical public health researchers, practitioners, and policymakers.

This programme prepares candidates for careers in public health practice and research in community, government, and private-sector settings. Candidates develop highly marketable skills in core public health functions such as assessment and research, programme planning, evaluation, and policy development that translate well into a variety of fields and positions. Graduates have the potential to be employed by hospitals, regional health authorities and research institutions, among others. Graduates are equipped with the knowledge and skills to evaluate public health programmes and policies to increase their impact on communities.
